Sterling Book House/Shroff Publishers & Distributors Pvt. Ltd., 2006. Softcover. Book Condition: New. The cockpit and equipment racks of modern aircraft, large and small, are becoming filled with ever more sophisticated systems. This book attempts to describe a certain class of such systems, namely those which rely for their operation on electromagnetic radiation. The subject matter is complex and wide-ranging, hence not all aspects can be covered in one volume. In deciding where the treatment should be light or perhaps non-existent, I have asked myself two questions: (1) which aspects can most usefully be covered in a book; and (2) at which group of people involved in aviation should a book covering such aspects be aimed? The answer to (1) must be 'describe the theory'. One can, and indeed must, read or be told about how to operate the system; how to navigate using the systems; how to solder, crimp and change items; how to use test equipment, etc. but proficiency is impossible without practice. On the other hand gaining an understanding of how a particular system works is more of a mental exercise which can be guided in a book such as this. This is not to say that more practical matters are neglected, since it would not help one's understanding of the theory of operation not to see, at least in words and pictures, how a particular system is controlled, presents its information, reacts to the environment, etc. Having decided the main line of attack the more difficult question of depth of treatment must be answered; in other words which group should be satisfied? Pilots need a superficial knowledge of how all the systems work; maintenance engineers on the ramp and in the hangar a more detailed knowledge; workshop engineers must have an understanding of the circuitry for...
