Excerpt from The Christian Athlete: A Sermon Story This story was first read to my parish in Massachusetts. From the first the new method of presenting truth met with a hearty response, and instead of a few present the church was crowded evening after evening. The attendance after the story was finished continued almost the same. People thus became deeply interested in the Sunday evening services. At that time there were many requests for publication. A busy pastorate does not allow much time for such work, and the duties of the parish prevented further consideration of the story. When called to my present field of labor the same problem of the Sunday evening service was present. The best sermons that could be prepared by the pastor, and the most excellent music of a consecrated choir, failed to attract the indifferent people of the community. In desperation the sermon story was re-written and given. Free use of the newspapers and special music secured a splendid attendance for the first evening. The congregations constantly increased, and the interest in...
