The President, by offering up his priorities and policy choices, means to start a healthy debate about how much to spend on what, and he recognizes that Congress will have its own, often different ideas, but he believes firmly that the total spent must be limited to the amount he has recommended. Second, the idea that the budget should become more transparent and honest than its recent predecessors. We propose to return to the spirit of the Budget Enforcement Act, by working with Congress on a budget that sets actual limits on spending, followed by appropriations bills that conform to those limits and pass in a timely fashion. We propose to limit tactical circumventions, such as advance appropriations and bogus emergency spending that has served to evade legal expenditure limits and to confuse the public about how...
