This is partly because, as is the case in every country, the commoner forms of speech seem uncouth and unclassical to students who have learnt their Arabic either in universities, from munshis in India, or from Syrians (who are frequently in Egypt the professed instructors). The basis of the common speech is, however, classical, though not directly recognisable as such. The fact that some of the words have not been encountered in the comparatively scanty literature of the Arabs, nor in the Koran, does not preclude them from being Arabic, though the forms of speech may not rank higher than such English forms as shan t, ain t, and I ve. The Egyptian language has also the characteristic of using many words in their diminutive form. Thus ma, water, becomes moyyah; saghir, small, saghayyar, hence also the form shuwayyah which again is scarcely recognisable in the expression bi shweysh meaning slowly. Further, letters are sometimes transposed: zog, a pair, becomes goz; yil an becomes yin al, the most common expletive in use, in the form yin al abuk! May your father be cursed...
