An incredibly great book with perfect and lucid answers. Better then never, though i am quite late in start reading this one. You will not sense monotony at whenever you want of the time (that's what catalogues are for relating to if you question me).

Excerpt: . . . 5 funded and under way, studies of the open subarctic Pacific Ocean, the main feeding ground for most salmon stocks, are much more difficult both to design and to fund. Two relatively inexpensive approaches are probably the ways to begin, retrospective studies and modeling theoretical studies. These are needed both to frame hypotheses and to design process studies and monitoring efforts. PICES is holding a CCCC Workshop on Conceptual Theoretical Studies and Model Development in Nemuro, Hokkaido on 23-28 June 1996 and is convening a one-day symposium on Methods and Findings of Retrospective Analyses at its Fifth Annual Meeting in Nanaimo, British Columbia in October. PICES has a Working Group on Monitoring the Subarctic Pacific Ocean and a Technical Committee on Data Exchange - these will also support the CCCC program. The other desideratum at this early stage is a network of committees and study groups in which scientists participate in planning in a systematic way, achieving some sort of coordination among the different national GLOBEC and GLOBEC-like programs. Development of an effective scientific program is colored by fishery politics, in the United States (Alaska vs. the rest of the country) and internationally. Salmon politics seem to be particularly virulent. In some countries, fishery agencies take the view that all research on salmon and ecologically related species - that is, everything else - is their exclusive property. Perhaps in those countries, fishery science is intimately linked with the other disciplines necessary for ecosystem studies - meteorology...
