She drew away her hand; I grasped it still closer. we shall see ou another again, I said; we shall sind one another out; under whatever sorm it is, we shall know one another. I am going; yes, I am going os my own accord; but is it was sor ever; it would be more tharr I could bear. Adieu, Charlotte, adieu Albert! we shall see one another again. Yes, to-morrow, I sancy, sheadded, smiling. I selt the word to-morrozv. Alas! she scarcely knew when she withdrew her hand srom me. She withdrew her handsrom me--She went down the walk. I stood and sollowed her with my eyes, then threw mysels on the ground iii apassion os tears; I got up again, and ran up the terrace, and there I ftilMaw under the shade os the lime-trees, her-white gown...
