Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .on a subject which has received but little attention and which is of vital Import-ance; after giving most interesting In-formation and valuable tables, the au-thor concludes as follows; All the presumption is in favor of the married as against the single. The family is an added incentive for him to keep up his insurance. The conservatism of the family man, together with the higher rates of advancing years, combine to lead him to persist. The single man, on the other hand, having only him-self to care for, either takes out an en-dowment policy for his own benefit, or he is very liable to allow bis policy to lapse when stress of circumstances tempts him. From the regulation made by the different companies, It will be seen that the line is drawn, not at marriage per Be, but at some of the conditions which accompany it. Only one of the distinctions made has any reference to longevity, and that relates to the child-bearing period In women. All the others deal mainly with the moral hazard, but are applicable only to women; for in no case is any dis-tinction made between married and unmarried men 218 Death Rate of the United States. By J. E. Cowglll, C.A., Indianapolis, Ind. This paper is the first of a series of three bearing on geographical death rate, occupation and congestion of-population; the author gives as a rea- son for lack of material on this sub-ject the difficulty of getting true and...
