Olanrewaju was excited to have completed his university education. In a time of great insecurity challenge in his country, Nigeria, it was time for him to undergo the compulsory one year National Youth Service Corps (NYSC) scheme, which he detests so much. Attracted to the brilliance of a fellow corps member from the three days Orientation Camp, the disparity of ethnic sentiment threatens their budding love story. Letting go was an option until something dramatic happened few months to the end of their service year. Their parents forbade such marriage, leaving them with very difficult choices. Love seems insufficient in the face of their daunting challenge of family values at variance, and they must look within themselves for provocative ways to survive the storm. This is an unprecedented, highly tensed romantic narrative by an African!.
